NC Utilizes Instant Runoff Voting in Judicial Offices

North Carolina voters can select a Court of Appeals Judge by Instant Runoff Voting (IRV) on November 2, 2010. Also, IRV will be used to select three Superior Court Judges in Buncombe, Cumberland, and Rowan Counties. This method of voting combines the Primary and Election Day into one election. Voters will select their 1st choice for IRV contests like every other contest on the ballot, but they will also rank their 2nd or 3rd choices in the event the first round results produce no majority winner.

How It Works

► First Round of Counting

Voters select their 1st choice for an office just as they have done in previous elections. Additionally, voters may select their 2nd or 3rd choices. The voters' 1st choices are tallied and are reported unofficially on Election Night. If a candidate gets enough 1st choice votes to win (more than 50%), then they are certified as the winner at Canvass and no further counting is necessary.

► Second Round of Counting

If no candidate receives enough 1st choice votes to reach the majority threshold (more than 50%), the first two candidates move to the instant runoff. The winner is determined by adding any 2nd or 3rd choice votes to their initial vote totals. After all counting is concluded, the candidate with the most first and second round total votes wins the election.
